Mrs. Marshall's dress came in contact with the flames. The woman rushed in the front room, picked up her year and a half child, carried it out in the yard, and sat it down. Realizing her helplessness, she then rushed to the home of a neighbor, and was met by a young man, who threw water on the woman from the hydrant in the yard and assisted her in removing her dress and extinguishing the flames.

Mrs. Marshall has been in a comatoss state ever since the accident, and it is feared that she inhaled some of the flames. Little hope is entertained for her recovery.
